What a funny little game! Terra Lander reminds me old school games which i played on Atari 800 XL. I love simple graphics, great music and "Hawking", who is trying to comment player's failures;-). Retro games are not my cup of tea (not all of them), but this one is likeable.. Simple little game where you try to land your craft on the landing pad. A few levels in it starts to require you to shoot things to progress. Now I had to fail a few different times before even noticing the mention of shooting controls somewhere. The big problem with the shooting is that there is no reticle of any sort and I had to drag my mouse in the approximate direction I wanted to shoot, for every single shot. I couldn't just drag in a direction and keep clicking to keep shooting in that direction, if that makes it any clearer. Overall I didn't find it very fun, and the shooting thing just made it annoying. I wouldn't recommend it, even on sale.. Back in the 80s, we would have loved this game. Its honestly a great little retro inspired space lander physics / shooter game.. The cards was the funniest part of the game. no direction for gun doesn't fire half the time. Alright . I played games like this when I was a kid . so it's old school. Much more polished than games back then though. You need to guide a lunar module through various cave systems, with different gravity settings, which would be hard enough, but you also have alien gun emplacements shooting at you while you are trying to squeeze your module through a gap just a few pixels wider than your ship. It's not easy, and the game throws insult after insult at you while you constantly fail! I made it to level 6 of 20 before calling it a day. I'm not young enough and the precise control needed to guide your ship abandoned me years ago. BTW, shooting is via the mouse. You don't have to start over from level 1 when you die, use the arrow keys to select "Furthest" and you'll start on the highest level you reached. I liked what I saw of the game, frustratingly hard as it is, but just don't have the motor control to play it past level 6.. I really like it, this game has me fishing for quarters to drop in the DVD slot! They totally captured the feel of an early 80's arcade game. Its hard, but not impossible. Its just spot on for what I remember. Controls are arrow keys or wasd for movement. To shoot at the fuel tanks or enemy turrets you hold a left click and move your mouse in the direction you want to shoot. It takes a bit of getting used to but you get the hang of it quick.. Game is fun.
